

BG

Press Kit
Berlin, 14.7.22

Selbstausbeis mit Tabea Blumenschein, Erdmannstraße 12, 1976. Archiv Ulrike Ottinger © Ulrike Ottinger

InterPlay

Tabea Blumenschein
Ulrike Ottinger

15.7.–31.10.22

BERLINISCHE
GALERIE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

BG

Contents

Press release

InterPlay

P.3

Biographies

P.6

Exhibition text

P.8

Publication

P.9

Press images

P.10

Contact

P.13

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Red Queen), 1989, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger
© Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Kai-Annett Becker

InterPlay

Tabea Blumenschein
Ulrike Ottinger

15.7. – 31.10.22

Tabea Blumenschein (1952–2020) is best known for the roles she played in films by the internationally renowned director Ulrike Ottinger (*1942). In her latter years Blumenschein’s artistic creativity found another powerful channel in drawing. In hundreds of stylised fictional portraits resembling characters from comics, the artist combined the things she loved: fashion, folklore, kitsch and pop culture. Insofar as they are not versatile self-portraits, Blumenschein’s figures with their colourful tattoos and costumes quote an aesthetic of queer and sub-culture.

The Berlinische Galerie now presents this hitherto little-known work in a selection of around 40 colourful large-format sheets. With an equal number of photographs by Ulrike Ottinger of Blumenschein in various film projects, the event celebrates the artistic partnership and friendship between two key protagonists of the Berlin art scene in the 1970s and 1980s.

This show marks a generous gift of works by Blumenschein in Ottinger’s collection to the Berlinische Galerie. They will enrich the museum in its deep and constant interest in the achievements of twentieth-century women artists. Apart from those who helped forge the heyday of modern art, such as Jeanne Mammen (1890–1976) and Lotte Laserstein (1898–1993), retrospectives here regularly showcase living artists based in Berlin today, such as Dorothy Iannone (*1933) and Loredana Nemes (*1972).

Early work

Blumenschein’s early drawings date back to the years between 1968 and 1972 when she was studying at the Bodensee Art School in Konstanz (now the Academy of Applied Graphics and Design). On show here for the first time, they are inspired by techniques of Surrealism and Pop Art. The portraits of Ottinger drawn by Blumenschein in her early twenties reveal affection and admiration. Colourfully embellished with heads of angels, birds, flowers and stars, they weave intricate waves and patterns into the sitter’s mane of curls. As an art student Blumenschein was still searching. To lend form to her dreams and her love, she experimented with etching and pen-and-ink, with felt pens, coloured inks and gold paper.

Metamorphosis

Ottinger’s films created fantastical settings where the actors took on several roles, slipping in and out of genders. In “Laocoon & Sons” (1972/73), “The Enchantment of the Blue Sailors” (1975) and “Madame X – An Absolute Ruler” (1977), Blumenschein demonstrated her skills as a quick-change artist.

BG

In these first three movies, she embodies Ottinger's characters as they switch gender on a quest for identity. Then, in "Ticket of No Return" (1979), her path through West Berlin leads from the glamorous to the dissolute and into an abyss of self-destruction.

Ottinger's photographs were often – but not always – taken during the shoot. They celebrate her friend's beauty and her expressive power. This considerable corpus of work reflects an interplay between the two artists as they spontaneously explore identities and gender roles, acting out these themes in a glittering array of provocative images.

Feminist self-empowerment

In the course of her collaboration with Ottinger, Blumenschein became a professional clothing designer and a sensitive character actor. As costume designer for the films they made together in the 1970s she mastered the artistic process from original sketch to production and performance.

When her collaboration with Ottinger came to a temporary end after the film "Ticket of No Return" in 1979, Blumenschein found a new framework for her activities in the punk music and avant-garde scene of West Berlin. In 1980 the short-lived German edition of Andy Warhol's magazine "Interview" published an unusual fashion page with four drawings by Blumenschein under the heading: "Fashion is world history without politics". That sentence is a philosophy: fashion is a form of artistic expression that can absorb any culture in the world and apply, interpret or re-signify it for its own creative purposes. What is ugly can be beautiful, what is alien can be familiar and what is good can be evil. That became the guiding principle for Blumenschein's feminist self-empowerment.

Along with Blixa Bargeld, Frieder Butzmann, Dagmar Dimitroff, Wolfgang Müller, Nikolaus Utermöhlen and others, she was one of the "Geniale Dilletanten" whose manifesto was published in 1982, together with her drawings, under the legendary Merve imprint.

When Müller and Utermöhlen founded their band "Die Tödliche Doris" in 1980, Blumenschein joined them as a costume designer and performer. In 1984 she appeared in their show in New York. She made films of her own in the super-8 format. In May 1985 the German TV channel ZDF screened her 60-minute film "Zagarbata", made two years earlier, which began with footage of a live concert by the "Böhse Onkelz", regarded back then as Nazi skinheads, and went on to feature Claudia Skoda, Marc Brandenburg and Wolfgang Müller. Blumenschein's obsession with what it meant to be German was especially apparent in the early 1990s. From now on, in various manifestations, it was part and parcel of her visual idiom, always accompanied by antithetical motifs: women, sailors, bearded ladies, and indigenous peoples from a wide range of cultures, such as Mexico, Hawaii, the Pacific or Africa.

Love of detail

Between 1988 and 1990 Tabea Blumenschein perfected the motif of female beauties with a wealth of attributes. It was a particularly fascinating chapter in her experiments with identity: the pirate queen with a skimpy bodice, tattooed arms and a cigarette drooping from the corner of her mouth surrounded by symbols from comics and popular culture; or the empress ringed by turbaned skulls with big black poisonous spiders on a fiery red robe.

A distinctive feature of all these motifs is that the figures are heavily contoured and simplified yet highly varied in their ornamentation. Such detailed working demands time and patience from the artist. The love of detail is love of the motif.

Blumenschein's queer icons began to diversify: the beautiful woman gave way in about 1990 to the young "Marine" with the same eyes, puckered lips and beauty spot. Her pictures of "Lovely Sailors" play on a figure that became a gay symbol of hypersexuality and masculinity.

In the mid-1990s, the theme of "Germany" began to enter her works. She explored the meaning of home, all the more poignant after two periods living in a hostel for homeless women and then in shared accommodation in the Adlershof district of Berlin.

Late work

In 1999 Blumenschein managed to rent a flat in a high-rise estate on Allee der Kosmonauten in Marzahn. Encouraged by the fortunate if gradual restoration of her long-interrupted contact with Ottinger, the artist tackled new themes, partly inspired by Ottinger's cinematic excursions to China, Mongolia, the Taiga and Crimea. She took an interest in the explorer James Cook, jotted down little stories on paper to go with her drawings of palm trees, Hawaiian girls and pirates, gluing on photographic self-portraits. A drawing dedicated to the popular Wild West icon Calamity Jane testifies to her lasting fascination with strong women who assert themselves in a man's world.

BG

In the final years of her artistic production, Blumenschein enriched her universe of contradictory gender and role images with new motifs, including “bearded ladies” in splendidly ornamental garments. Shrouded in androgynous myth, these figures came from a long tradition in popular culture: at 19th-century fairgrounds they were exhibited in so-called freak shows. From Ottinger’s films “Laocoon & Sons” and “The Enchantment of the Blue Sailors”, Blumenschein had her own experience of metamorphosing into a young man with a Menjou moustache.

But the bearded ladies theme is not simply about switching roles. Its appeal lies rather in merging the two genders and all the beautiful connotations associated with each, creating a hermaphrodite – in appearance if not organically. Blumenschein’s bearded ladies in their tight-fitting dresses and ballerina tutus are proud to display their lovely breasts, while their silken beards are long, plaited and adorned with ribbons.

This text is based on the essay “Detail Is All. On Tabea Blumenschein’s Art” by Annelie Lütgens in the book “ZusammenSpiel” published by Hatje Cantz.

The exhibition upholds the traditions of Das Verborgene Museum and has been funded by the Capital Cultural Fund (HKF).

Publication

Publication from Ulrike Ottinger, edited by the Berlinische Galerie. With contributions by Annelie Lütgens, Ulrike Ottinger, Katharina Sykora. Graphic design by Tobias Honert / zentrale. Published by Hatje Cantz Verlag, German/English, 576 pages, 500 illustrations, two volumes in a slip case.

“ZusammenSpiel”

Vol. 1: Tabea Blumenschein

Vol. 2: Ulrike Ottinger

ISBN 978-3-7757-5243-5

68,00 €

Programme

berlinischegalerie.de/en/visit/calendar

Press images

berlinischegalerie.de/en/press-release/interplay

Onlinetickets

bg.berlin/en/tickets

Social Media

#BlumenscheinOttingerBG

#berlinischegalerie

Press

Berlinische Galerie

Ulrike Andres

Head of Communication and Education

Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 829

andres@berlinischegalerie.de

Contact

Julia Lennemann

Communication

Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 831

lennemann@berlinischegalerie.de

Berlinische Galerie

Berlin’s Museum of Modern Art,

Photography and Architecture

Alte Jakobstraße 124–128

10969 Berlin

Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 600

berlinischegalerie.de

Admission 10 €, concessions 6 €

Wed–Mon 10 am–6 pm

Tue closed

BG

Biography

Tabea Blumenschein

1952

Born in Rietheim, Baden-Württemberg

1968–1972

Studies at Bodensee Art School Konstanz

1971–1984

Film projects together with Ulrike Ottinger: “Laocoon & Sons” (1971–1973), “The Enchantment of the Blue Sailors” (1975), “Madame X – An Absolute Ruler” (1977), “Ticket of No Return” (1979), “Dorian Gray in the Mirror of the Yellow Press” (1984)

1973/74

Moves to West Berlin with Ulrike Ottinger

1978–1984

Realises stage and film projects with Walter Bockmayer and Rolf Bühmann. Wins the Deutscher Filmpreis as set designer for the film “Looping. The Long Dream of Short Happiness” in 1981. She also designs costumes for the theatres in Frankfurt am Main, Cologne and Düsseldorf

1980

Fashion drawings and photographs by Tabea Blumenschein are published in the German edition of the magazine “Interview” (no. 6, autumn 1980)

1981

Creates illustrations for the book “Geniale Dilletanten” (edited by Wolfgang Müller, published by Merve)

1981–1987

Sporadic appearances with “Die Tödliche Doris”, a well-known group of musicians and artists for whom she designs stage costumes. They perform together in New York, Munich, Osnabrück, Berlin and on Heligolande

1982–1999

Her living conditions are precarious. She loses her flat in Schöneberg and lives temporarily with various friends. Eventually she finds shelter in a hostel for homeless women on Czernikowskistrasse in Schöneberg. Later she moves to a women’s hostel in Berlin-Adlershof. During this period she calls herself a “housewife”.

1985

Makes her first full-length film “Zagarbata”, (super-8 film, 16 mm), shown on the TV channel ZDF. The cast includes Claudia Skoda, Marc Brandenburg, Wolfgang Müller and Böhse Onkelz.

1999

Moves to a one-room flat on Allee der Kosmonauten in Berlin-Marzahn. Lives off social benefits. Does not stop drawing

2002

Is taken on by the dressmaking workshop “Nadel und Faden” as part of a statutory job creation scheme

2020

Tabea Blumenschein dies in Berlin aged 67.

BG

Biography

Ulrike Ottinger

1942

Born in Konstanz, Baden-Württemberg

1962–1968

Freelance artist in Paris. Learns graphic techniques in Johnny Friedlaender's studio

1969–1972

Founds and runs the "filmclub visuell" and the "galeriepress" (gallery and imprint) in Konstanz. Her exhibitions there include Wolf Vostell, R. B. Kitay and David Hockney

1971–1984

Film projects together with Tabea Blumenschein: "Laocoon & Sons" (1971–1973), "The Enchantment of the Blue Sailors" (1975), "Madame X – An Absolute Ruler" (1977), "Ticket of No Return" (1979), "Dorian Gray in the Mirror of the Yellow Press" (1984)

1973/74

Moves to Berlin with Tabea Blumenschein. Shoots the happening documentary "Berlinfever – Wolf Vostell" (1973)

1974

Performs "Transformer – Deformer" with Tabea Blumenschein at the Galerie Ars Media

1980–2019

Regularly purchases drawings by Tabea Blumenschein

1983

Directs stage and opera productions and designs her own sets

1988/89

Shoots her feature film "Johanna d'Arc of Mongolia" in Mongolia

1985–2016

Filming takes her, among other places, to South Korea, Japan and the Bering Sea.

Documentary and feature films (selected): "Freak Orlando" (1981), "China. The Arts – The People" (1985), "Countdown" (1990), "Taiga. A Journey to Northern Mongolia" (1992), "Southeast Passage" (2002), "The Korean Wedding Chest" (2009), "Chamisso's Shadow" (2016)

2019/20

Her film "Paris Calligrammes" interweaves personal memories of the 1960s and the social, political and cultural changes of the period

Photographic Œuvre

Throughout her artist career Ottinger has also taken photographs, usually in the run-up to or during a film. Leading art exhibitions such as the Biennale di Venezia (1980), documenta (2002, 2017) and the Berlin Biennale (2004) have shown her photographic oeuvre.

Awards (selected)

Preis der Deutschen Filmkritik/ Best Documentary (1986); Bundesfilmpreis/Filmband in Gold for the visual design of "Johanna d'Arc of Mongolia" (1989); Verdienstkreuz am Bande, Order of Merit of the Federal Republic of Germany (2010); Hannah-Höch-Preis awarded by the City of Berlin (2011); admission to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, Los Angeles (2019); Hans-Thoma-Preis awarded by the Federal State of Baden-Württemberg (2021)

BG

Exhibition

text

Introduction

Tabea Blumenschein (1952–2020) made her mark with the roles she played in films by the internationally renowned director Ulrike Ottinger (*1942). This exhibition celebrates the artistic bonds between these two protagonists and their influence on the Berlin art scene, especially in the 1970s and 1980s.

While working with Ulrike Ottinger, Tabea Blumenschein acquired professional skills as a make-up and costume designer and became a versatile actor. In later years she explored drawing as a particularly powerful form of expression. In hundreds of portraits sketched in her flat, comic-like style, Blumenschein works up characters and symbols from a variety of sub-cultures. These often androgynous figures have colourful tattoos, funky outfits and an aura of glamour.

The drawings are matched here by Ulrike Ottinger's photographs of Tabea Blumenschein, taken during various film projects and on shoots. They illustrate a spectrum of roles that knows no boundaries and respects no gender norms, stylistic genres or historical eras. In these pictures Ottinger highlights the beauty and expressive artistry of her friend, who was her companion for nine years. They remained in contact even after separating.

This exhibition is being held on the occasion of a large donation of works by Blumenschein from the collection of Ottinger to the Berlinische Galerie. It underpins the museum's deep, unwavering interest in the artistic accomplishments of twentieth-century women.

The exhibition upholds the tradition of "Das Verborgene Museum" and has been funded by the Capital Cultural Fund (HKF).

Publication

ZusammenSpiel
Tabea Blumenschein
Ulrike Ottinger

“She, a woman of high beauty, created like no other to be Medea, Madonna, Iphigenia, Aspasia, decided one sunny winter day to escape her loneliness and to leave La Rotonda. She bought a ticket ‘Aller jamais retour. Berlin Tegel’.” This is the opening scene of Ulrike Ottinger’s momentous 1979 film “Ticket of No Return”—the woman of high beauty was Tabea Blumenschein. Unconcerned by all conventions, Blumenschein adored transformation: in a distinctive, avant-garde aesthetic, the two women embraced various different identities and challenged many norms, in the process revealing the performativity of gender. Initiating a dialog between the two artists’ perspectives, these books bring together for the first time Blumenschein’s drawings with Ottinger’s photographs from their joint performance sessions.

Editor

Berlinische Galerie

Publisher

Hatje Cantz Verlag

Authors

Annelie Lütgens, Ulrike Ottinger, Katharina Sykora

Format

29,00 x 20,00 cm

Pages

576 pages

Illustrations

500 coloured illustrations

Languages

German and English

ISBN

978-3-7757-5243-5

Price

68,00 €

BG

InterPlay

Tabea Blumenschein
Ulrike Ottinger

15.7. – 31.10.22

Selbstauslöser mit Tabea Blumenschein, Erdmannstraße 12, 1976,
Archiv Ulrike Ottinger © Ulrike Ottinger

Allez – Jamais Retour (Tabea Blumenschein), Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1979 © Ulrike Ottinger

Aelita, Spiegelhelm (Tabea Blumenschein), Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1975
© Ulrike Ottinger

Die Witwe, in Allem was den Witwenstand ausmacht (Tabea Blumenschein)
Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, 1975 © Ulrike Ottinger

Ulrike Ottinger und Tabea Blumenschein im Atelier Erdmannstr. 12, Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1977
© Ulrike Ottinger

BG

Claudia Skoda, Tabea Blumenschein und Jenny Captain, Wohnung Erdmannstr. 12, Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1976 © Ulrike Ottinger

L'heure bleue (Tabea Blumenschein), Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1975 © Ulrike Ottinger

Tabea Blumenschein, Kontext: „Madame X – Eine absolute Herrscherin“, Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1974 © Ulrike Ottinger

Matrose im Ozeanischen Freudenhaus (Walter Busch, Tabea Blumenschein, Roller, Andreas Kelling), Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Kreuzberg 1975 © Ulrike Ottinger

Aus der Serie „Die Sekretärin“ (Tabea Blumenschein), Foto: Ulrike Ottinger, Berlin 1977 © Ulrike Ottinger

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Glow-in-the-Dark), 1988, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger © Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Anja E. Witte

BG

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Selbstportrait), 1988, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger
© Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Anja E. Witte

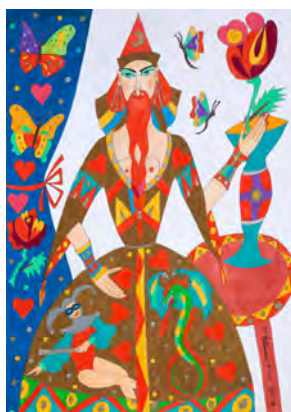

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Portrait Ulrike Ottinger), undatiert, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger
© Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Anja E. Witte

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Liegende Schönheit), 1991, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger
© Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Anja E. Witte

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Red Queen), 1989, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger
© Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Kai-Annett Becker

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Bartfrau), 2013, Schenkung Ulrike Ottinger
© Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Anja E. Witte

Tabea Blumenschein, Ohne Titel (Yumiko Tanaka, Ulrike Ottinger und Yoko Tawada), 2019, Schenkung
Ulrike Ottinger © Townes / Shoko Kawaida / Harald Blumenschein, Foto: Anja E. Witte

Contact Press

Ulrike Andres
Head of Communication and Education
Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 829
andres@berlinischegalerie.de

Julia Lennemann
Communication
Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 831
lennemann@berlinischegalerie.de

Contact Programme

Christine van Haaren
Head of Education and Outreach
Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 836
haaren@berlinischegalerie.de

Katrin-Marie Kaptain
Education
Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 837
kaptain@berlinischegalerie.de

Berlinische Galerie
Berlin's Museum of Modern Art,
Photography and Architecture
Alte Jakobstraße 124–128
10969 Berlin
Tel +49 (0)30 78 902 600
berlinischegalerie.de